Rethinking Youth Political Socialization Teenage

Although not denying the value of adult-sponsored programs or the significance of adults in young people s lives, our analysis examines the experiences and perspectives of youth activists to add a needed dimension, that of youth-led political socialization, to the existing insights of the youth civic and political engagement literatures. By broadening this literature, we hope to rethink some of its core tenets: namely, that there is a crisis of youth apathy signaled by young people s

Why Has Civic Education Failed to Increase Young People's

Young people's clear preference for more 'direct' and everyday forms of political participation should be nurtured by civic educators while public policy should be crafted to address the raft of barriers to young people's political participation.
